About Luca Pacioli

Luca Pacioli- lived from 1445 to 1517

Luca Pacioli was an Italian mathematician who published the influential book Summa in 1494 giving a summary of all the mathematics known at that time.

Luca Pacioli is famously known as The Father of Accounting and Bookkeeping due to his tremendous contributions in the field of accounting. He was born to Bartolomeo Pacioli in Sansepolcro, Tuscany in 1445. He was not raised by his parents but the Befolci family in a small town named as Sansepolcro. The early education that Pacioli received focused more on subjects that would be useful for becoming a merchant and was in Italian language. He traveled to Venice as a young boy and started tutoring three sons of the great merchant Antonio Rompiasi. Alongside, he continued his studies and learned mathematics to a much higher level under Domenico Bragadino. In 1470, Pacioli came up with the very first of his books which was for the guidance of his students.

After that Pacioli moved to Rome and studied mathematics and theology from Leone Battista Alberti. For few years, Pacioli even held the position of friar in the Franciscan order. He then started teaching mathematics in different universities of Italy and joined the University of Perugia in 1477 where he became the chairman of the mathematics department. Other institutes where he taught mathematics include Zara in the Venetian Empire (now known as Jadera in Croatia), the University of Naples and the University of Rome.

Impact on accounting and business:

Pacioli dramatically affected the practice of accounting by describing the double-entry accounting method used in parts of Italy. This revolutionized how businesses oversaw their operations, enabling improved efficiency and profitability. The Summa's section on accounting was used internationally as an accounting textbook up to the mid-16th century. The essentials of double-entry accounting have for the most part remained unchanged for over 500 years. "Accounting practitioners in public accounting, industry, and not-for-profit organizations, as well as investors, lending institutions, business firms, and all other users for financial information are indebted to Luca Pacioli for his monumental role in the development of accounting."
